

Juan Narvaez

Juan Narvaez is a passionate musician and educator with a great passion for classical music, jazz, and music from different cultures around the world. He composes, arranges, and performs as a soloist and collaborator. Juan studied piano performance at the Alfred Cortot School in Paris, at Florida Atlantic University, and at Algoma University in Canada- the latter from which he graduated in 2016. He has studied with renowned pianists and teachers that include: Dr. Adam Aleksander, Sergei Sichkov, Andrei Gorog, Dr. Irena Kofman, and Dr. Anne Louise-Turgeon.

Juan has more than seven years of experience teaching and performing classical music as well as accompanying instrumentalists, choirs, and singers. He has experience with classical solo piano music, chamber music, orchestral music, jazz, musical theater, Latin-American music, and popular music. Juan has had the opportunity to play in master classes with Alexander Beridze, Conrad Tao, Leslie Kinton, and James Anagnoson. He has played with the FAU Symphony Orchestra and the Algoma University Jazz Ensemble. He has collaborated with instrumentalists and singers, accompanied choirs, and has worked as a church pianist and organist.

Juan's students can expect to develop an appreciation and love for the piano and classical music while learning about music theory, music history, and healthy, efficient piano technique. In the process of learning, students will cultivate aural skills, artistry, and musicality.
